the tremendous bear with one trap-ruined foot which, in an area almost a hundred miles deep, had earned itself a name, a definite designation like a living man. He had listened to it for years: the long legend of corncribs rifled, of shotes and grown pigs and even calves carried bodily into the woods and devoured, of traps and

The Bear That Wasnâ€™t No two people are exactly alike. Each is an individual with unique talents, interests, and values. At the same time, each also belongs to many different groups. Everywhere, to be human means to live with others. In groups, we meet our most basic needs. In groups, we learn a language, customs, and values.

In this paper, I report an incident of tool-use by a wild North American brown bear (Ursus arctos). Although brown bears have been studied extensively in the wild (e.g. Gilbert 1999 ; Green and Mattson 2003 ; Fagen and Fagen 2004) and are commonly kept in captivity, little is known about their cognitive abilities.
